

Eventbrite

20 Event Planners on How to Reduce the Environmental Impact of Events

You might think you have enough on your plate when organising an event to worry about being environmentally friendly. However, there are many low-effort, small changes you can make, that will have a big impact on the sustainability of your event. We asked 20 planners to share with us the initiatives they've put into action at their events to be cleaner and greener. Read on and be inspired – you're bound to pick up some easy tips you can incorporate into your next event.

Natalie Cobb, Private Dining London

“We take public transport or cycle to meetings with clients in the London area where possible. We try to reuse and gift any leftover food, decor and floristry to prevent waste. For example, the flowers from our Secret Garden event were taken over to be used in our London Food Month event.

“We also find suppliers that are most local to the area where the event is being hosted. This cuts down fuel mileage and pollution on a small scale and it does save the client money in their budget. Every little bit helps!”

